Allegheny County's 2024 Common Level Ratio Drops to 54.5%

Examples of How Residential Property Owners Can Win With a 2024 Property Tax Assessment Appeal

Allegheny County's common level ratio ("CLR") will drop considerably to 54.5% in 2024. Allegheny County's CLR is the factor used to convert a property's market value into assessed value. Property taxes are based on assessed value. Over the last three years, the CLR has come down significantly from 86.2% in 2021.

However, assessed values will not automatically be adjusted by the new 54.5% CLR. Property owners must file a 2024 tax assessment appeal in order to get the benefit of the change in the ratio.

To illustrate, here are just two examples on how a property's assessed value can change from "fair" to "over-assessed" over time.

Example 1: Existing property owner – The CLR “snapshot” becomes unfair over time

In 2020, Jim purchased his home for $900,000 (the "Property"). As a result of Jim's purchase price, in 2021 a "snapshot" was taken and the Property was assessed at $775,800 (based on the 2021 CLR of 86.2%). Jim will pay property taxes on $775,800 in assessed value.

In 2024, the Property will remain assessed at $775,800, unless Jim files a tax assessment appeal. In 2024, an assessed value of $775,800 would mean that the Property is being taxed as though it is currently worth $1,423,500 (based on the 54.5% CLR). If the Property is worth less than $1,423,500, the Property's assessed value is too high in 2024. Jim should file a tax assessment appeal to reduce his property taxes.

Example 2: New purchaser saddled with an existing unfavorable assessment

In 2023, Sue purchased the Property from Jim for $1,000,000, and the Property is worth $1,000,000 as of 2024.

The Property's assessed value should drop from $775,800 to $545,000 (based on the 54.5% CLR). Sue may also be able to argue for other market values depending various methods of valuation. However, the Property's assessed value will not automatically change. No taxing authority will ask that the assessed value be modified, because it would result in fewer property taxes. Unless Sue files a 2024 tax assessment appeal, the Property's assessed value will remain at $775,800, and Sue will be overtaxed.
