Chad I. Michaelson is a trial lawyer with over 15 years of experience resolving complex business disputes. He litigates cases in state and federal courts across the country, and before domestic and international arbitration tribunals. An active member of the firm's Business Litigation and Construction Law & Litigation Groups, Chad also serves as a member of the firm's Management Committee. In addition to his general construction practice, Chad stays current on the law of building code administration and enforcement, and he regularly represents building code officials in litigation and administrative proceedings. He also has an interest in green building and chairs the firm's Sustainable Development Group.

Representative Matters

- Litigates a wide variety of breach of contract matters.
- Helps companies prevent unfair competition, counsels closely-held companies in corporate governance disputes, handles insurance coverage matters, and resolves numerous real property and land use cases.
- Helped a manufacturer recover several million dollars in damages caused by a component with hidden defects.
- Counsels owners, contractors, and architects/engineers throughout the construction process, from contract negotiation to claim resolution.
- Litigates delay, loss of productivity, and other highly technical construction claims on both public and private projects.
- Obtained a $6 million award for a contractor that encountered differing site conditions on a highway project.
- Handles a variety of disputes involving the ownership and development of oil and gas, with a particular focus on shale gas extraction.
- Represented a brine well operator in emergency proceedings seeking to protect its subsurface facilities from nearby hydraulic stimulation operations.
